The reluctance of the Left front government to introduce computers in schools across the state has put the children of Bengal even behind students from smaller towns like Jamshedpur when it comes to computer skills.

The fact came to light from the results of an IT quiz organised by Tata Consultancy Services (TCS) in the city where students from Loyola High School of Jamshedpur emerged regional champions for the Kolkata edition and National Gems High School from Kolkata emerged runner-up.

The winning team of Shubham Agarwal and Aviral Dasgupta said that they had started serious preparation only since last week as throughout the year, their school organises several quizzes on information technology. "We have our own IT fest where schools from across India participate, besides Cyber Mania, an intra-school quiz," said the Jamshedpur team.
