It's the End of the Road for Hyundai

Santro as Entry-level Cars Lose Appeal

Last unit of model, which has been averaging sales of 2,000 units a month, was produced last week

Mumbai: Santro, the car that helped Hyundai Motor establish a strong identity in India, has been discontinued yet again.

With a sustained increase in vehicle prices and the resultant falling demand for entry-level cars, Hyundai Motor India has been compelled to pull the plug on the humble hatchback. The last unit of the latest generation Santro was produced last week, several people in the know told ET.

Some said the recent draft notification making it mandatory for M1 category vehicles, or cars with seating capacity up to eight passengers, to have six airbags may have been a critical factor in this decision.

It may not be viable for original equipment manufacturers (OEMs) like Hyundai to invest in making low-margin, low-volume models comply with the upcoming safety regulation, they said.

Over the last six months, Santro has been averaging sales of 1,500-2,000 units a month, making it unviable for

Goodbye 'Tall Boy'

Over the last 6 months, Santro has been averaging sales of 1,500-2,000 units/month

Latest generation of Santro with BS-VI engine has seen prices rising 20-30% to ₹5.7 lakh

Santro's long-term rival Wagon R has emerged best-selling car in India in FY22 with sales of 1,88,838 units

South Korean car maker to sustain profitability on the model.

Relaunched in 2018 at price of ₹3.9 lakh to ₹5.1 lakh, the latest generation of Santro with the BS-VI engine has seen its prices rising by 20-30% to ₹5.7 lakh ex-showroom over the last few years.

The new Santro hasn't been able to recreate the success story of its predecessor. Part of the reason could also be the evolution of the Indian passenger vehicle market with a growing demand for SUVs and premium hatchbacks. Sales of SUVs have bettered those of hatchbacks consistently in recent months—making it the largest selling sub-segment in the country's passenger vehicle market.

Santro was the first brand Hyundai launched in India, back in 1998. The 'tall boy' established Hyundai in India and remained one of the top-selling models for many years. It witnessed some facelifts and introduction of a more powerful, 1.1-litre engine during its first generation.

But the second innings has been short and bleak. The decision to stop its production could be part of Hyundai's strategy to consolidate on sustainable, profitable models, people cited above said. An email seeking response from Hyundai Motor India remained unanswered till press time Monday.

Interestingly, the only other tall boy in the country and Santro's long-term rival, Wagon R of Maruti Suzuki has emerged the best-selling car in India in fiscal 2022 with sales of 1,88,838 units.

During the same period, Santro's sales stood at around 23,700 units. The current generation sold 1.46 lakh units over the past four years in the domestic market. Sales of the second-generation Santro were the highest in FY12 at an estimated 51,514 units in the domestic market.

Twitter CEO, Musk Differ Over Bot Accounts

New York: Elon Musk sparred with Twitter chief executive officer Parag Agrawal over the prevalence of spam bots on the platform, with the company's would-be owner saying the numbers are far higher than acknowledged.

Musk, who has agreed to buy Twitter for $44 billion, said last week that he was putting the deal "on hold" until he had more information about the company's would-be owner saying the numbers are far higher than acknowledged.

estimates at least 20% of Twitter accounts are actually spam. In a Twitter thread, meanwhile, Agrawal said the number is less than 5% when measuring daily users—a figure the company has previously cited in quarterly filings. Bloomberg
